Section C $(3 \times 10 = 30)$

Answer any three of the following in detail.

16. Write a letter to the Municipal Commissioner highlighting the poor maintenance of road and drainage system in your locality.

17. Give a factual description of your college Sports day celebrations.

18. Write a group discussion on "Role of women in development", giving both arguments and counter arguments

19. Write at least ten sentences by way of introducing your cousin who has come from USA.

20. Make notes of the following passage:

Anything printed and bound in book size can be called a book, but the quality or mind distinguishes the value of it. What is a book? This is how Anatole France describes it:

"A series of little printed signs essentially only that It is for the reader to supply himself the forms and colors and sentiments to which these signs correspond. It will depend on him whether the book is dull or brilliant, hot with passion or cold as ice. Or if you prefer to put it otherwise, each word in a book is a magic finger that sets a fibre of our brain vibrating like a harp string and so evokes a note from the sounding board of our soul. No matter how skilful, how inspired the artist's hand, the sound it makes depends on the quality of the strings within ourselves."

Until recently books were the preserve of a small section-the urban upper classes. Some, even today, make it a point to call themselves intellectuals. It would be a pity if books were meant only for intellectuals and not for housewives, farmers, factory workers, artisans and, so on. In India there are first-generation learners, whose parents might have been illiterate. This poses special challenges to our authors and to those who are entrusted with the task of disseminating knowledge. We need much more research in the use of language and the development of techniques by which knowledge can be transferred to these people without transmission loss. Publishers should initiate campaigns to persuade people that a good book makes a beautiful present and that reading a good book can be the most relaxing as well as absorbing of pastimes. We should aim at books of quality no less than at quantitative expansion in production and sale. Unless one is constantly exposed to the best, one cannot develop a taste for the good.
