ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

India is a hub of cultural edifices in the form of Temples. They play a pivotal role in society. They serve as the epicenter for the day-to-day affairs of the people in society. Hence the Indian rulers in the past took a keen interest in constructing considerable monuments in the form of temples. Tamil Nadu is studded with many exquisite Temples. Temple was not built only for religious purposes but also for social, economic, and cultural activities of the village. Each and every village has its own temple which served as the learning center patronizing arts and Crafts- Painting, Sculpting, acting as Library, Educational Institution, Hospital, Assembly hall for local bodies, Court, etc. The inscriptions engrave on the walls of the temples are veritable mines of information and throw wonderful light on all the above aspects of the people of the bygone ages. Though the inscriptions shed more light on the political history of the particular period, they are also endowed for the promotion of Culture, Religion, Society, Education, Art, Building Technology, Trade, Rural Economy, Irrigation, Agriculture and village Administration.

Perhaps the temple inscriptions touch all the above aspects of the people of the past. The Indian Temple architecture plays a vital role and it had regional variations and variety. The three styles of Indian architecture namely Nagara, the Vesara, and the Dravida are basically geographical in nature. However, the stylistic features of each provenance have their own characteristic feature. Starting from the Mauryan period to till 16th century CE, India witnesses the vestiges of monuments both living and non-living is belonging to the Buddhist, Jaina, and Hindu pantheons. Scattered all over the Indian sub-continent, this focuses the engineering marvel of the bygone eras. One can see the development from rock-cut chambers to structural edifices.
