Post-Independence generations of Indians came to associate the term 'scientific temper' with the maker of modern India, Jawaharlal Nehru. For it was he who invited fellow Indians to participate in the adventure of building a strong and forward-looking nation with the help of modern science and technology. A scientific temper required a new approach to life and things, free from obscurantist ideas steeped in irrational dogmas and superstitions. It needed an educational system expressly wedded to the promotion of democratic, socialistic and secular values. In actual terms it meant adoption of the kind of culture which prevailed and prospered in the last three hundred years in Europe and America. The industrial revolution and all that made it possible was part of that culture. Empiricism and experimentation are its backbone. A certain objectivity and avid pursuit of truth based on verifiable facts are its essential concomitants. Such a temper is in fact both a cause and an outcome of the modern world.

A great part of Arabia is desert. Here there is nothing but sand and rock. The sand is so hot that you cannot walk over it with your bare feet in the day time. Here and there in the desert are springs of water that come from deep down under the ground - so deep that sun cannot dry them up. These springs are few and far apart, but wherever there is one, green grass very soon covers the ground all around it. Soon fig trees and palm trees grow tall and graceful, making a cool, green, shady place around the spring. Such a place is called an oasis.

The camel is much more useful to the Arab than his beautiful horse, however for he is much larger and stronger. One camel can carry as much as or more than two horses. The Arab loads the camel with goods and rides him, too, for miles and miles across the desert – just as if he were really the "Ship of the Desert" which he is often called.

Yes, there were giants before the Jamsahib (the great Indian cricketer Kumar Shree Ranjit Sinhji, better known to the world of cricket as Ranji). And yet I think it is undeniable that as a batsman the Indian will live as the supreme exponent of the Englishman's game. The claim does not rest simply on his achievements, although, judged by them, the claim would be sustained. His season's average of 87 with a total of over 3,000 runs, is really the high-water mark of English cricket. Thrice he has totalled over 3000 runs and no one else has equaled that record. His astonishing achievement is that he scored two double centuries in a single match on a single day.

In cricket, many runs and much dullness may be associated. If cricket is menaced with creeping paralysis, it is losing the spirit of adventure. It becomes a mere instrument for compiling tables of averages. There are dull, mechanic fellows who turn out runs with as little emotion as a machine turns out pins. There is no colour, no enthusiasm, no character in their play. Cricket is not an adventure to them. It is a business. There was no sunshine in Shrewsbury's game. Now, the Jam Sahib has the root of the matter in him. His play is as sunny as his face. It is as though his pockets are bursting with runs that he wants to shower with his blessings upon the expectant multitude. In his little kingdom, he has power of life and death in his hands, he is extremely popular, for it is obvious that his pleasure is in giving pleasure.

– A.G. Gardiner
