THEME OF THE SEMINAR

The growing interdependence of the world economy and international character of the business practices have contributed to the development of universal emphasis on consumer rights, protection and promotion. Consumers, world over, are demanding value for money in the form of quality goods and better services. Modern technological developments have no doubt made great impact on the quality, availability and safety of goods and services. But the fact of life is that the consumers are still victims of unscrupulous and exploitative practices. Exploitation of consumers assumes numerous forms such as adulteration of food, spurious drugs, dubious hire purchase plans, high prices, poor quality, deficient services, deceptive advertisements, hazardous products, black marketing and many more. Exploitation is more severe not only in the rural areas where the consumers are illiterate and ignorant of their rights, In addition, the information revolution has thrown newer kinds of challenges to the consumers like e- commerce, cybercrimes, plastic money etc., which affect the consumer in even bigger way. Consumer protection is a socio-economic programme to be pursued by the Government as well as the business as the satisfaction of the consumers is in the interest of both. In this context, the government, however, has a primary responsibility to protect the consumers' interests and rights through appropriate policy measures, legal structure and administrative framework. The best way to empower the consumers is to educate them and make them aware of their rights and obligations in the wake of high tech sales promotion measures and this two day workshop intends to do the same.
