Viruses are smaller than bacteria. On an average, they are about 50 times smaller than bacteria. They are dangerously infections agents found in all types of life forms including humans, animals and plants. viruses need a living cell to be active. Outside a living cell, a virus is inert but once inside a cell they reproduce and destroy the host cell. Viruses cause diseases like influenza, polio, rabies, chickenpox and AIDS.

Viruses are in our environment all the time waiting for a host cell to get into. They can enter our body through the mouth, nose or cuts in the skin. Once inside the body they find a host cell to infect. A virus can remain dormant for years even if it is inside a host cell. But there are viruses, that act as fast as they could once they are in a cell. The common cold virus acts as soon as it is inside the body. The head of a pin can easily accommodate about 500 million of the virus that causes cold viruses to infect an entire army.

Body language is a kind of non verbal communication. The thoughts, feelings and intentions are expressed through facial expressions, posture and gestures. It is said that "face is the index of the mind". Facial expressions reflect the inner ideas of a person. Eyes, eyebrows, lips and cheek movements convey the different moods of an individual. Body language is culture-specific. What is accepted in a particular culture may not be accepted in another culture. So one should take care to know about a country's culture before he/she visits the place. Body language is also useful in teaching a second language and law enforcement. It also helps in effective communication.
