Both Centres through their academic component and action – oriented programmes strive to inculcate and promote values that are necessary to achieve women's equality in sexist society. Through teaching and research in Women's Studies, they aim at effecting a change in the present attitudes and values regarding women's roles and rights. Their outreach and training programmes are designed to empower both the privileged and under – privileged women.

Background of the Conference

Social Exclusion is the denial of control over natural resources; the denial of opportunities for healthcare, education, housing; the denial of the right to participation in social, economic, political and cultural life; the denial of human rights and human dignity. Because it is an institutionalized and socially/religiously sanctioned attempt to exclude, segregate or cast out a segment of the population, it is that much more difficult to change. But social exclusion is being challenged in India in multiple ways. Exclusion and discrimination take different forms in different societies. They adapt and change themselves according to changing social reality. To say that in a modern and liberal society, exclusion is reduced or eliminated would not be in tune with reality. To deny the scope of identity-formation even among women would also be unrealistic.

It is said that the status of women in the society nowadays is considerably improved. There are still reports of domestic violence, coercion, rape and atrocities against women. Most of the women face hardships in earning, feeding and serving families. Many women are still living under coercion of their husbands. Women are always victims, in and outside the family. In the traditional Indian families; the society has wrongly modeled a picture of good women as submissive women.

In course of human development, exclusion has taken the form of segregating women from the social, political, economic, cultural, educational and religious domains of societal life. Thus, social seclusion provides base for a sense of superiority and inferiority among the members of the same society or culture. Further, it also culminates into a system of domination and subjugation. All these processes ultimately lead to oppression and exploitation. Women face exclusion in almost all sectors. To do away with social exclusion, inclusion and equity should be proposed. But inclusion is not a passive activity but a well planned and programmed inclusive mechanisms need to be put in place. In this regard, comprehensive and thoughtful papers are invited from all students, scholars, academicians, researchers and so on.
